Breaking Free from Guilt

Do not mix your feelings of regret and culpability with the integrity of the legal process. Allow your divorce negotiations to be driven by law and equity — not your feelings of guilt.

By Rebecca Zung

Carla knew that her husband was a good man and a good provider who was a dependable and loving dad. But she simply didn't love him anymore. She wanted a divorce. The guilt was nearly unbearable.

Mitch was a sex addict and married to his high school sweetheart. Conducting a double life for years, he was seemingly a model husband and family man. But the guilt he harbored about his clandestine activities caused him to be hospitalized due to a nervous breakdown.

Marlene hadn't seen her children in nearly a year. Her daughter's high school graduation was her chance to reconnect and begin to rebuild their relationship. Feeling guilty for having left her daughter's father, and for having been absent for so long, she chickened out and didn't show up — yet again.

Closely intertwined with shame and regret, guilt shows up in many different ways in divorce. Nearly every divorce has at least one party who is feeling some sort of guilt, shame or regret. This guilt comes from a sense that you have done something wrong. It may be from feeling that you have committed an offense against your spouse or children (that they won't grow up in a home with two parents, etc.), your family, or your god (divorce often has religious ramifications). Guilt is regret that has been fed hormones and steroids and has grown out of control.

Free from Story, Free from Guilt

Often times, at least one of the following three “deadly marriage sins” are present before divorce: abuse, addiction, and adultery. But what if none of these “sins” were a factor in your divorce? Then your reasons are much less overt. Perhaps you honestly no longer love each other, or you've grown apart. Perhaps you no longer have anything in common. You never fight and maybe you even consider the other person to be a good friend, but you no longer want to be married. Guilt will make its presence known in this situation because you'll question whether you are making the right decision. You'll wonder if you should stay in the marriage because things aren't dreadful.

Society has established the ideal that we get married and stay married until we are parted by death. This ideal was created thousands of years ago, when life expectancy hovered around 40 years of age. Today, living robustly into our 90s is common. Being able to choose a life mate that will be the absolute right one for potentially 70 years is a tall task. People evolve, change, and develop in different ways and at different paces. Sometimes, we get lucky and find that person who will progress in the same way we do. Sometimes, that person serves a purpose in our lives for a period of time, but the relationship has a natural life cycle that comes to an end organically when it begins to outlive its usefulness. It doesn't make one of you wrong and the other one right. It just is. Free from story and free from guilt. But that may not stop you from feeling guilty about it.

As if the guilt you feel naturally isn't bad enough, there may be some who seemingly take delight in practically ensuring that you feel guilty. From your soon-to-be former spouse, to your children, friends, co-workers and sometimes, even your own parents or family – everybody has an opinion (or more likely a judgment) about how you should conduct your life, and they may do this by casting shadows of doubt on your decisions. Because we spend an inordinate amount of time trying to look good and avoiding looking bad to others, this is precisely the type of interaction that has a deleterious effect on you.

Feeling guilty serves no purpose whatsoever. Becoming a masochist and crawling into a hole does not change the past or the present. It does not take away what you did or did not do. It does not heal the other person's hurt or anger. What it does do, however, is affect your future.

The Effect of Guilt on Negotiations

The impact of guilt on negotiations in a divorce is huge – and usually not positive for at least one of the parties. Guilt can become the third entity in a negotiation and is definitely a foe. In the context of negotiation, usually the party who feels the most guilt will respond in one of two ways.

The first way goes something like this: “I am horrible. I don't deserve to have anything. Please just don't hate me forever. Please don't tell all of our friends and family what a bad person I am. Just take whatever you want. You deserve it and not me.” This person has become their own worst enemy, and without careful supervision, might give away the entire proverbial farm.

The second way that guilt shows up is more difficult to spot because it sends signals to attempt to throw the other party off the trail. This person projects his or her guilt onto the other person, usually in an angry, forceful, and vengeful way. This party is likely to highly litigate the case and take unreasonable positions in order to attempt to extort the other. While this kind of behavior seems counterintuitive for a person who is feeling guilty, it makes perfect sense. The attempt is to deflect wrongdoing away from themselves with a lot of “noise”.

Guilt Does not Serve You

Regardless of whether you are more like the first kind of guilty person or more like the second, one thing is clear: guilt does not serve you, especially in negotiations. The end result is that the guilty party will end up with an unsatisfying result, one that will likely have a lot of regret attached to it.

You are good a person who may or may not have behaved badly. The first step to overcoming guilt is separating who you are from how you behaved. For example, parents can be angry at their child but still know that they are inherently good. Give yourself that same benefit of the doubt. You are not your behavior.

Do not mix your feelings of regret and culpability with the integrity of the legal process. Allow your divorce negotiations to be driven by law and equity – not your feelings of guilt. Separating these will be your first step in relieving yourself of these poisonous feelings.

The next step is to look forward and not back. In The Power of Now, Eckhart Tolle writes that the past no longer exists. You can't go back and touch it, interact with it, or be with it. It is gone. The future doesn't exist either. The only moment that exists is the present moment. I recall a saying that has stuck with me: “Don't be stressed over something in your past, because there is nothing you can do to change it. Focus on your present and create your future.” Seize your present moment and decide that this moment for yourself will be free from guilt and regret. ■

Child Support Overview

All parents have a legal obligation to support their children. The amount of child support payable/receivable post-divorce is based on a number of different factors; here's a general overview of how child support works.

By Diana Shepherd

Regardless of whether or not they were ever legally married, all parents have an obligation to support their children. In situations where the marriage (or marriage-like relationship) has broken down, the non-custodial parent is usually ordered to pay child support to the custodial parent; the custodial parent is expected to use these funds to pay for the child's expenses. In this situation, "custodial parent" means the one that the children live with most or all of the time after divorce; the "non-custodial" parent would have visitation or access rights, which might or might not include a certain number of overnight stays per week or month.

The amount of child support is based on a number of different factors, including the annual income of each co-parent, the total number of children in the family, and the custody arrangements for the children.

Child Support Guidelines

If there is one custodial parent (in most jurisdictions, this means that the children reside with this parent more than 60% of the time; ask a family law lawyer about the definition of sole physical custody in your area), then the state or provincial Child Support Guidelines set out the base level of child support payable for one or more children. The Guidelines are intended to cover necessities: food, shelter, clothing, health-care, public education, etc. (For more information about the US child-support guidelines, see: www.supportguidelines.com. For more information about the Canadian child support guidelines, see: www.canada.justice.gc.ca/eng/fl-df/child-enfant/look-rech.asp.)

You and the other parent can agree to pay for special expenses that go above and beyond what the child support guideline amounts will cover. These additional expenses generally need to be considered both necessary and reasonable by both parents: necessary because they are in a child's best interests, and reasonable in relation to both parents' incomes. (See "Special Expenses" for more information about this.)

Child support is generally payable until the children finish school or are emancipated (reach the age of majority, leave home, get married, or drop out of school). If the children are going to attend college, child support will generally continue until they obtain their degree; in some cases, courts have ordered child support to continue through a second (Masters level) degree. Make sure your divorce agreement states when child support will end (child's age and/or of level of education).

In the case of a special-needs child who will be dependent and living with a parent for the rest of his/her life, child support may be permanent. This is a complicated situation, so make sure you get good legal and financial advice before finalizing your divorce agreement if you have a special-needs child.

Opting out of the Child Support Guidelines

You and the other parent can choose to opt-out of the Guidelines and set up your own child support agreement as long as it is considered fair. If you choose to go this route, put your agreement in writing and sign it; this will reduce the risk of a misunderstanding, and it is easier to enforce a signed agreement. If you and the other parent wish to opt-out of the Guidelines, you should ask your divorce lawyer how much child support a judge would likely order to be paid in your situation and use that number as a starting point.

Before finalizing an agreement – especially if it diverges from the Guideline amounts – you should talk to a family law attorney. He/she can help you understand your legal rights and obligations, which guidelines apply to you, how to use those guidelines to calculate a child support amount, and provide the right documents if you go to court. You should also obtain advice from a financial professional – particularly about your ability to pay child support above and beyond the Guideline amounts.

Special Expenses

In many cases, children may have additional expenses that go beyond what the Child Support Guideline amounts will cover. As stated above, these special expenses generally need to be considered both necessary and reasonable by both parents: necessary because they are in a child's best interests, and reasonable in relation to both parents' incomes.

Special expenses could include items such as:

- Child-care expenses. The custodial parent incurs as a result of his/her job, illness or disability, or educational requirements for employment (e.g., returning to college to finish a degree in order to qualify for a job).
- Medical and/or dental insurance. The portion of the custodial parent's medical and dental insurance premiums that provides coverage for the children.
- Healthcare not covered by insurance. Examples might include medication, orthodontics, counselling, elective surgeries, eye exams and glasses, etc.
- Extracurricular activities. For instance, extra fees for sports, music, arts, and school trips.
- Private school or tutoring.
- Post-secondary education. Usually, this is for a first degree; however, it could include a second (Master's level) degree.

If both parents agree that additional expenses are both reasonable and necessary, then they will usually each contribute to them in proportion to their incomes – but they may also agree to an alternate division in which one parent pays anywhere from zero to 100% of the expense in question. Both parents are free to decide if a special expense is reasonable and necessary and how much each of them will contribute to them.

All parents have an obligation to support their children – whether or not they were ever legally married.

divorce, including tax, business valuations, forensic accounting estate planning, and collaborative law. We can do that work ourselves." For instance, Frank and Judy have agreed to split expenses for their two children's private school tuition proportionate to income. However, they disagree about ballet lessons for their daughter and rep hockey for their son, so Frank has agreed to fund 100% of the hockey and Judy will fund 100% of the ballet lessons.

In your divorce agreement, you can list special expenses that you expect to incur today, in the near future, or many years later. For example, you can specify who will pay for what proportion of uninsured orthodontic expenses, your children's daycare, and your children's college tuition.

What if you and your Ex Can't Agree?

Special expenses are often a hotly-contested area. If you can't agree on whether an expense is both necessary and reasonable, ask an objective financial professional to analyze your situation and let both of you know whether you can truly afford the additional expense. You should also speak to a family law attorney about how judges in your area are ruling on special expenses — and how the judge would likely rule if you took your case to court.

If you still can't reach agreement, you could hire a divorce mediator to help you resolve your differences, retain divorce lawyers to advise and assist in your negotiations, or go to court and ask a judge to decide. ■

Coming to Terms: Divorce Terminology in Court

Here's a glossary of some of the most common divorce terms used in divorce litigation and court.

If you've chosen to litigate your divorce, you're going to be hearing lots of unfamiliar terms as well as common words that have a very specific meaning in family law. Here's an explanation of some of the most common divorce terms.

Absolute Divorce: The absolute ending of a marriage, leaving both parties free to remarry.

Adversarial Divorce: When a couple cannot come to an agreement about the terms of their divorce.

Ab Initio: Latin phrase meaning "from the beginning."

Action: Lawsuit or proceeding in a court of law.

Affidavit: Written statement of facts made under oath and signed before a notary public or other officer who has authority to administer oaths.

Agreement: Verbal or written resolution of previously disputed issues.

Annulment: The legal end of an "Invalid Marriage". In the eyes of the law, the parties were never married to each other, but all children of their relationship remain legitimate.

Answer: Written response to a complaint, petition, or motion.

Appeal: The process by which a higher court reviews the decision of a lower court to determine whether there was reversible error. If so, the appellate court amends the judgment or returns the case to the lower court for a new trial.

Change of Venue: A change of judges or geographical location.

Collusion: An agreement between two or more persons where one of the parties brings false charges against the other. Collusion is illegal.

Common-Law Marriage or Relationship: Based on cohabitation where no formal marriage ceremony has taken place, this is a judicially recognized marriage in some U.S. states. All Canadian provinces recognize common-law relationships, but the rights and privileges are not the same as for those couple who entered into a legal marriage.

Complainant: The one who files the suit, same as plaintiff.

Complaint: This is a legal document filed by the plaintiff to start the divorce process. It states that the marriage has ended and lists the grounds and claims for the divorce. In some states it is also known as a petition.

Condonation: The act of forgiving one's spouse who has committed an act of wrongdoing that would constitute grounds for divorce. Condonation generally is proven by cohabitating with the spouse after learning that the wrongdoing was committed.

Contempt of Court: The willful failure to comply with a court order, judgment, or decree by a party to the actions. Contempt of Court may be punishable by fine or imprisonment.

Contested Divorce: Any case where the judge must decide one or more issues that are not agreed to by the parties. All cases are considered contested until all issues have been agreed to.

Corroborative Witness: A person who testifies for one of the parties and backs up their story.

Court Order: A written instruction from the court carrying the weight of law. Orders must be in writing. Anyone who knowingly violates a court order can be held in contempt of court.

Cross Examination: The questioning of a witness presented by the opposing party on trial or at a deposition. The purpose is to test the truth of that testimony.

Decree: The final ruling of the judge on an action for divorce, legal separation, or annulment. Decree has the same meaning as judgment.

Decree Nisi / Rule Nisi: An order by the court stating that a conditional divorce will become absolute by a certain date, unless a party contests the order.

Default: A party's failure to answer a complaint, motion or petition.

Defendant: The partner in a marriage against whom a divorce complaint is filed. Defendant has the same meaning as respondent.

Deposition: The testimony of a witness taken out of court under oath and reduced to writing. The deposition may be used to discredit a witness if he changes his testimony.

Direct Examination: The initial questioning of a witness by the attorney who called him or her to the stand.

Discovery: In the U.S., Discovery is a procedure followed by attorneys to determine the nature, scope, and credibility of the opposing party's claim. Discovery can include depositions, written interrogatories, and notices to produce documentation relating to issues relevant to the case.

Dismissal: Occurs when a party voluntarily drops the case (in some states) or when a judge finds that a case totally lacks merit.

Dissolution of Marriage: The legal process of ending a marriage. In most U.S. states, this is the legal term for divorce.

Divorce: The legal proceeding by which a marriage is legally terminated. It may be contested (where one party denies the allegation or wants to keep the marriage in place) or uncontested.

Equitable: Means fair; does not necessarily mean equal.

Evidence: Proof presented at a hearing, including testimony, documents or objects.

Exhibits: Tangible things presented at trial as evidence.

Ex Parte: An application for relief conducted for the benefit of one party only. These judicial proceedings are generally reserved for urgent matters in which requiring notice would subject one party (or his/her property) to irreparable harm. Examples include a Temporary Restraining Order (TRO) against an abusive spouse to stay away from the abused party, or a TRO stopping a spouse from removing or destroying family property.

Expert Witness: In court proceedings, the expert witness is the professional whose testimony helps a judge reach a decision.

File/Filing: To place a document in the official custody of some public official.

Financial Affidavit/Statement: Key document used to collect financial data; in some states and provinces, it may be known as a "Financial Statement" and may use a standard form. This document becomes part of the record of documents that are filed with the court.

Foundation: The evidence that must be presented before asking certain questions or offering documentary evidence in trial. If a piece of evidence lacks foundation (proof, facts to back it up) it will not be admitted or considered as evidence in the court case.

Guardian-ad-Litem: A person appointed by a judge to prosecute or defend a case for a person legally unable to do so, such as a minor child.

Hearing: Any proceeding before a judicial officer.

Jurisdiction: The power of the court to rule upon issues relating to the parties, their children or their property.

Legal Separation: Court ruling on division of property, spousal support, and responsibility to children when a couple wishes to separate but not divorce. A legal separation is most often desired for religious or medical reasons. A decree of legal separation does not dissolve the marriage and does not allow the parties to remarry. Some states (e.g., Texas) do not recognize legal separation.

Lis Pendens: A piece of property cannot be transferred during a pending lawsuit that may change the disposition of it, once a notice has been filed in the public record.

Litigation: The process by which a civil case settles parties' rights.

Modification: A change in the judgment, based on a change in circumstances.

Nuptial: Pertaining to marriage.

Order: A ruling by the court.

Pendente Lite Orders: A temporary order of the Court that provides support until the divorce is finalized. Pendente Lite or Temporary orders are automatic in some areas.

Perjury: The act of lying while under oath.

Petition: A written application for particular relief from the court. In some jurisdictions complaint for divorce is entitled "petition for dissolution."

Petitioner: The person who filed the Petition or Complaint. Also referred to as the Plaintiff.

Plaintiff: The spouse who initiates the legal divorce process by filing a complaint or petition stating that the marriage is over and listing the grounds and claims against the other spouse. Plaintiff is the same as Petitioner.

Precedent: Decisions found in other pre-existing cases that factor into the case at hand.

Prenuptial Agreement/Marriage Contract: Prior to a marriage, partners contractually agree how assets and liabilities will be divided in the event of a divorce. In Canada, this is known as a "Marriage Contract".

Privilege: The right of a spouse to make admissions to an attorney, clergyman, psychiatrist or others as designated by state law that are not later admissible as evidence.

Pro Se Divorce: A divorce wherein the divorcing partners represent themselves in court (with or without a mutually agreeable separation agreement) without the assistance of attorneys.

Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO): In the U.S., this is a court ruling earmarking a portion of a person's retirement or pension fund payments to be paid to his/her ex-spouse as part of a division of marital assets.

Quid Pro Quo: The giving of one valuable thing for another.

Rebuttal: The introduction of evidence at a trial that is in response to new material raised by the defendant at an earlier stage of the trial.

Reconciliation: When parties decide to get back together. They may sign a reconciliation agreement, which is enforceable by the court.

Respondent (Defendant): The party defending against a divorce petition (complaint).

Restraining Order: A court order prohibiting a party from certain activities. Restraining orders are often issued to protect against domestic violence or to protect marital assets. In some jurisdictions, violating a “domestic restraining order” is a criminal offense.

Retainer: Money paid by the client to the lawyer or expert witness to obtain a commitment to handle the client’s case. A retainer can be a deposit against which the lawyer or expert witness charges fees as they are earned.

Separation or Settlement Agreement: A written contract dividing property, spelling out rights and obligations, as well as settling issues such as spousal and child support and custody.

Standard of Living: A factor when determining spousal support, allowing the recipient an adequate amount to maintain their current lifestyle.

Stipulation: An agreement between the parties or their counsel, usually related to matters of procedure.

Subpoena: A court order requiring a person’s appearance in court or at a deposition as a witness or to present documents or other evidence for a case.

Summons: A Summons is a written notification to the defendant or respondent that an action has been filed against him or her. It notifies a spouse of his/her rights and obligations in responding to the Complaint for Divorce.

Testimony: Statements under oath by a witness in a court hearing or deposition.

Transcripts: The written record of the divorce proceedings, testimony or depositions.

Trial: The time when a judge hears the contested permanent or temporary issues, with supporting evidence and witnesses, in a couple’s divorce decisions. The judge may take a few hours or a few weeks to review the information presented and issue a court opinion.

Uncontested Divorce: When the defendant is not going to try to stop the divorce and there are no issues for the court to decide about the children, money or property.

Venue: The County in which the case is heard.

Voir Dire: Where the opposing counsel has the opportunity to disqualify an expert witness.

Common Divorce

Questions

Answers to some of the more frequently asked questions about the divorce process in Illinois

Legal Issues

“What should one know when hiring a divorce attorney?”

Karen Covy, a family lawyer in Chicago, answers:

The two most important things you need to know when you are hiring a divorce attorney are:

1. the kind of a divorce you want
2. the kind of divorce the attorney handles.

There are many ways to get a divorce today. You can try to divorce amicably by settling directly with your spouse. You can use mediation. You can use collaborative law. You can fight in court. Before you make any other decision, you need to know which of these options you want to use. Then, after you decide how you want to get a divorce, you need to decide which attorney will be best to help you achieve the result you desire.

If you want to divorce amicably, hiring a “shark” attorney who is best at fighting in court does not make sense. If your spouse is fighting you tooth and nail, hiding assets, and making the divorce difficult, then hiring a peaceful negotiator may not be in your best interest; in this case, you may need the shark attorney. The key is to match the result you want to achieve with the kind of attorney who can best achieve it for you.

“Can my spouse and I conduct our own negotiations without our lawyers present? Of course, we’d each have our own lawyer look over any agreement before we signed it.”

Jeff W. Brend, a family lawyer in Chicago, answers:

If you have the ability to peacefully discuss the issues involved in the divorce (such as custody, visitation, and property division), then I encourage you to open a dialogue with your spouse. However, it is important that you talk to an attorney prior to discussing the issues with your spouse so that you understand the parameters of your legal rights. Once you and your spouse understand the issues involved, you can then begin to negotiate. Throughout the negotiations, you should stay in contact with your attorney to avoid bargaining away any rights you may have. Conducting negotiations directly with your spouse can greatly minimize your legal costs.

Open communication with your spouse often reduces adversarial confrontations — including litigation in court — which is always beneficial to you and your children's mental health. You and your spouse may also have certain priorities that you want incorporated into the agreement. For instance, you may want to keep the marital home and ensure you have enough cash flow to provide for the monthly expenses associated with it; whereas your spouse's first priority may be to receive future retirement benefits. If you can effectively express your priorities to your spouse and resolve your issues, it will help provide you with the peace of mind that your main objectives were met and help you to feel comfortable with the outcome of the divorce. Divorce can be a stressful time in your life, but keeping lines of communication open with your spouse and limiting confrontation and anger will ease the tension you may be feeling.

“What impact will my divorce have on my health insurance?”

Brandi Ruffalo (MBA, AVA), a financial divorce advisor in Chicago, answers:

Insurance expenses can change dramatically post-divorce so it is important to contact your insurance company as soon as possible to understand how your coverage will change and what the cost will be.

If you were previously covered under your spouse's insurance plan through his/her employer, your coverage will most likely terminate as of the date of divorce. You may qualify for COBRA under the same plan, but you will need to note the timeline for coverage under COBRA as it may only be available for a certain number of months. Regardless, the cost of COBRA may be substantially more than your family policy because your former spouse's employer may not provide any support for the continuation of your coverage under COBRA.

If children are involved, they may continue to be covered under the plan regardless of the divorce, but your spouse would be responsible for including them on his dependent coverage request and responsible for paying for their coverage.

If you have pre-existing conditions, the process may be further complicated; it is critical to report these pre-existing conditions to an agent who might be quoting the cost of a health insurance policy and also to any insurer with whom you apply for coverage. Most policies contain coverage restrictions that may allow the insurer to deny coverage or to drop you from coverage if you do not properly disclose pre-existing conditions.

You should get a quote from an independent company; individual policies might be cheaper than coverage under COBRA policies. But any savings could be negated due to restrictions regarding pre-existing conditions.

Health insurance continues to be one of the hot buttons for anyone contemplating divorce. I recommend that you consult an insurance professional or a financial professional who has the proper experience to explore alternatives with you.

Financial Issues

“How could my income taxes be affected by my divorce?”

Tracy Coenen (CPA, CFF), a Chicago-based accountant who is also certified in financial forensics, answers:

Divorcing couples must file their income taxes as “married” until the divorce is final. The marital status on the last day of the calendar year will determine the filing status for the whole year. For example, if a couple's divorce becomes final on December 10, 2014, they will file as unmarried on their 2014 taxes. Each will file as either single or head of household, depending on their circumstances.

The two most common issues related to income taxes and divorce are spousal support and child support. In general, spousal support is taxable to the receipt and deductible by the person paying the support. Child support is not taxable or deductible by either party. However, special circumstances can affect the taxability of both types of support, so you should consult a qualified tax professional regarding your own situation.

Tax issues may also arise when real estate and business interests are transferred or sold as part of the divorce proceedings. Issues may also arise related to audits and unpaid income tax liabilities. When unreported income and unpaid taxes are at issue, innocent spouse relief may come into play. Under the innocent spouse rules, a spouse may be relieved from the tax liability for joint income tax returns when that spouse did not know or had no reason to know about the liability. However, it is difficult to qualify under the innocent spouse provisions; anyone seeking to qualify under these rules should retain a qualified tax professional to evaluate the circumstances.

“Are alimony and child support taxable? If so, is there any way of structuring support payments to my ex to lower my taxes?”

Bruce Richman (CPA, CDFA), an accountant and Certified Divorce Financial Analyst® in Chicago, answers:

First, you must understand that spousal support (or alimony) and child support are two different types of payments and that they are taxed differently. When we think of spousal support, we think of the amount paid by one former spouse to the other former marital partner under a divorce or separation agreement. In general, payments made to an ex-wife or to an ex-husband (let us not think only men pay spousal support) are taxable to the recipient and deductible to the payor if the payments qualify as alimony. Not all payments to a spouse are considered alimony for tax purposes. For payments to an ex-spouse to qualify as alimony, they must meet the following tests:

- Payment must be in cash
- Payment must be pursuant to a divorce or written separation agreement
- Divorced or legally separated spouses must reside in separate households when payment is made
- Payments to a third party on behalf of the payee spouse must be evidenced in writing

- Liability for payment must not continue beyond the death of the payee spouse
- The divorce instrument must not designate non-alimony treatment

On the other hand, payments identified as (or deemed to be) child support, or terminating on (or associated with) a contingency relating to a child are considered child support and are not tax deductible by the payor.

Having stated these general rules, there are times and ways to change the treatment of these payments. If the two spouses are in different tax brackets, it may be beneficial for both spouses to have the payments (alimony and child support) treated as alimony. Under this scenario, due to the difference in tax brackets, it may be possible to pay a greater sum of money to the ex-spouse and have the net effort of the after-tax payments to the payor spouse being less. Obviously, the greater the spread in tax brackets between the two, the better the savings.

This is the best way to have what would have been considered child support now treated as alimony and deductible. There are certain nuances that one needs to watch out for, such as not to have the payments reduced at a time that can be construed as being based on a contingency relating to a child, such as when a child turns 18, marries, or leaves school.

Every divorce has its own set of unique circumstances, so a professional must look at each case individually when designing a plan or providing specific advice.

Here's an example that may help to explain how this could work. Marge and Joe are getting a divorce. Marge wants a portion of Joe's pension; how does she get her interest in his pension?

First, let's clarify what a pension is. These days, "pension" is a generic term for a variety of plans that include:

- Profit sharing plan, including 401(k) plan
- Money purchase pension plan
- Tax sheltered annuity (403(b) annuity plan)
- Defined benefit pension plan

The first three types of plans listed have participant account balances: that means that Joe has an account balance, just like an investment account. The defined benefit plan has no participant account balance; only an actuary can determine the value of the account at a point in time.

When can Marge get the pension? The general rule is that Joe's account can be split between his interest and Marge's. Marge can either keep her share in the company plan or roll it over into an IRA she sets up under a Qualified Domestic Relations Order (QDRO) that her attorney prepares and files for her. It is crucial that Marge gets a QDRO — with it, she has a right to Joe's pension interest and can roll it over to her own IRA if she chooses. Without it, there can be dire tax consequences for both Joe and Marge.

But even a QDRO can't force a plan to give Marge money before Joe has a right to it. Especially with defined benefit pension plans, participants may need to wait until reaching retirement age to get distributions. And rather than being able to roll over an account balance into an IRA, Marge may be limited to getting a monthly income at the point that Joe is entitled to retirement benefits.

Remember that whenever Marge gets her portion of Joe's pension, it will be taxable income. Consider the tax consequences when splitting assets during your own marital settlement.

“How does getting divorced affect my social security?”

Heather Locus (CPA, CFP, CDFA), a divorce financial advisor in Chicago, answers:

Here are the basics: A person can collect Social Security benefits based on her own earnings history or 50% of her spouse or former spouse's benefit (if greater than her own). If the spouse or former spouse is deceased, she can typically collect 100% of her spouse's benefit (i.e., the higher benefit “lives on”). The value of a person's benefits also depends on the age at which benefits are initiated relative to her Full Retirement Age (FRA). FRA is determined by her year of birth and currently ranging from ages 65 to 67.

If benefits are initiated prior to FRA, income is reduced by 5-6.67% per year.

If benefits are initiated post-FRA, income is increased by 8% per year thereafter up to the maximum benefit at age 70. Spousal benefits do not earn delayed retirement credits, so delaying spousal benefits past FRA is not recommended.

Here are few more important details about spousal benefits:

- The marriage must have lasted 10 years or longer for you to qualify for spousal benefits.
- The ex-spouse seeking spousal benefits cannot be remarried, unless she remarried after age 60 or the subsequent remarriage ended prior to seeking benefits. (Note: It does not matter whether or not the former spouse has remarried.)
- She and her former spouse must both be over age 62.
- The divorce must have been finalized more than two years ago or else the former spouse must currently be collecting benefits.
- If the former spouse dies, she is “Should the spouse who has no knowledge of the ex or soon-to-be ex spouse’s business activities sign a joint individual tax return? What are the potential damages in signing a joint tax return?”

Larry Goldsmith, a certified public accountant and forensic financial analyst in Northbrook, answers:

Some spouses plan for their divorce by filing erroneous tax returns years in advance. By not reporting all the business income or by claiming improper business expenses, the profit of the business is reduced — which means they will pay less tax and possibly reduce their spousal support obligations.

When the Internal Revenue Service or the State of Illinois discovers the unreported income and/or improper business expenses, the taxing agencies will hold both spouses “jointly and severally” liable for the under-reported income taxes. This means that the spouse who wasn’t hiding monies or over-reporting of business expenses may be liable for unpaid or accrued income taxes on the under reporting of the ex-spouses income. If the guilty spouse has money hidden so that the IRS or the IDOR cannot find the money, then the IRS and the IDOR will take the money from the innocent spouse’s bank accounts.

Unfortunately, the guilty ex-spouse who is hiding assets can burden the innocent spouse with 100% of the income tax responsibility for the taxes that are due.

Last year I met with a woman whose husband had been cheating on his income taxes for three years. The woman was told by an IRS collections officer that she owed $220,000. The reasons were as follows:

1. The IRS audited her husband’s business tax return and found unreported income.
2. The husband had no bank accounts or investment accounts the IRS could locate with money to pay the taxes due, whereas the wife had bank accounts and investment accounts with assets.
3. The wife signed the joint income tax return.

The IRS then garnished the woman’s wages, placed a lien on her pre-marital real estate and levied her bank accounts.

In signing a tax return one must agree to the following: “Under penalties of perjury, I declare that I have examined this return and accompanying schedules and statements, and to the best of my knowledge and belief, they are true, correct, and complete.”

Maybe you believe you are protected because you have in your divorce decree or an executed income tax identification agreement drafted by the attorneys that your spouse agrees to pay all taxes owed, or that may be owed upon a tax audit. However, the IRS and the State of Illinois are not bound by either your divorce decree or the signed identification agreement.

We will often recommend to the innocent spouse that she should file a separate tax return rather than a joint tax return for protection of her assets.

If an innocent spouse presents a well-documented case, the government may consider the granting of “innocent spouse” status, which is an exception from liability. To qualify as an innocent spouse and protection from IRS collection is a complicated process. The IRS awards this status to very few spouses — even though they were truly unaware of their spouse’s wrongdoing.

If you are in a shaky marriage and you believe that your spouse or soon to be ex-spouse is improperly reporting his taxable income from his business, do not sign a joint tax return.

“Will the recent changes to the Illinois pension system affect my divorce?”

Tina Abramovitch, a family lawyer in Chicago, answers:

In December 2013, Illinois lawmakers approved legislation designed to remedy the underfunded pension system that has contributed to the State of Illinois’ debt problem. This new legislation is to take effect in June 2014, but pending lawsuits may delay the commencement. Multiple groups have filed class action lawsuits over the new legislation arguing that the new law violates the constitution of the State of

COLLABORATIVE DIVORCE

A new approach to separation and divorce which protects the dignity, integrity, and long term best interests of your family!

The collaborative approach appeals to couples who want to retain some control over their separation and wish to resolve their differences creatively, with dignity and respect. Above all, this approach requires a commitment from both spouses, their respective lawyers, and any other professionals who may be engaged by the couple to assist in the process to reach solutions without going to court. Collaborative practitioners — lawyers, mediators, financial specialists, child specialists, and coaches — have been specially trained to work as a team, to provide the expertise needed for a particular case. The collaborative process is tailored to the individual family and recognizes their needs, values, and financial resources. Collaborative Divorce is especially suited to situations where shared responsibility for raising children means parents will remain in touch for years after they separate.

For many couples, the collaborative approach offers couples an alternative that is less stressful, more cost-effective, and more empowering, often resulting in solutions that better reflect the needs of the family.

JEFFREY W. BREND, JD, CPA/ABV, ASA, CFE, CFF, AAML., Attorney/Financial Specialist is exceptionally qualified to encourage the collaborative process from a family law and financial perspective. He is qualified as a financial expert to value businesses, determine net income and complete financial investigations. Jeffrey is currently serving on the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers Collaborative Law Committee. He is also a fellow of the Collaborative Law Institute of Illinois and a member of International Academy of Collaborative Professionals.

Illinois that says pension benefits may not be diminished.

Many State retirees argue that they should not have to pay the price to solve a problem created by the State not funding the pension system appropriately, despite the workers having paid their requisite shares. Given that pensions acquired during a marriage are marital in nature, (meaning they could be part of the property of the marriage), this new legislation can have an impact on a person's future financial security. If a person waives his or her right to a spousal pension, or accepts a lump-sum buyout, this new legislation may be detrimental to one or both parties given the current level of uncertainty. It is important that a person going through divorce proceedings in Illinois seek representation to ensure that his or her rights are protected — not just at the time of the divorce, but in the future as well.

If you're currently going through a divorce, or have recently gone through a divorce, you should contact a lawyer who focuses their practice in the area of family law; you also want to make certain they are experts in the areas of understanding pensions, or that they work with professionals who are. There are many issues to consider when a person is facing divorce in Illinois that will impact his or her financial security, so it's always best to seek professional help.

Children's Issues

"Can the amount of my child support payment be changed after our divorce has been finalized?"

Jay Frank, a family lawyer in Chicago, answers:

The answer is "yes." Illinois divorce law provides that the amount of child support can be changed, up or down, after the case has been finalized. In fact, this can happen any number of times until the obligation to pay child support is eliminated.

Divorce Mediators:

If you want to reach your own decisions about the issues involved in your divorce, consider working with one of the following neutral, third-party mediators who specialize in divorce mediation.

DIVORCE MAGAZINE CONGRATULATES

Jeffrey Brend,

JD, CPA/ABV, ASA, CFE, AAML
Family Law, Forensic Accounting
& Business Valuations

We would like to congratulate Jeff Brend of Levin & Brend P.C., on his recent appointment as the President of the Illinois Chapter of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers. To learn more about his outstanding accomplishments, please visit www.levinbrend.com

Child support is payable to age 18 or completion of high school, but not past age 19. In order to change child support, a party must file a petition with the court and send notice to the other party. The court will then have jurisdiction to modify the child support payments in the future, starting with the date that the petition was filed. Child support payments that were due before the filing of the petition cannot be modified.

In order to increase or decrease the payments, the party filing the petition must be able to show “a substantial change in circumstances.” Generally, this requires a change in the financial circumstances of one of the parties. The most common situations deal with fluctuations in income.

For example, the party receiving the child support (and let’s assume in this case that the recipient is the ex-wife/mother of the children) could lose her employment and therefore have less funds available for support of the children. She would then file a petition for an increase in support. Or, but more rarely, the mother could obtain a new job at a much higher salary than before. In this case, she would have more funds available for support of the children and the other party (again, let’s assume that this would be the ex-husband or the father) could then file a petition seeking a decrease in support.

On the other hand, the father could lose his employment or, alternatively, find another job with a much higher salary. In the first situation, the father would file a petition to reduce support because he no longer has the income available to fund the support payments. In the second situation, the mother could file a petition to increase the child support as father now has more funds available.

Another common scenario is where the father remarries, and the new spouse enjoys a high paying job. While the new spouse’s income cannot be counted for child support purposes, Illinois courts have held that her income frees up some of the father’s income as it is no longer needed for his expenses. Therefore, the father has more available income for child support, and the mother could file her petition for an increase on these grounds.

There are even situations in which the court will increase the father’s child support payments even though there has been no change in his income or in mother’s income. In cases where the children are older, and their expenses have increased, some courts have awarded an increase in child support even though the income of the parties has remained the same.

It’s a good idea to check with your lawyer every few years and ask him to investigate the possibility of a modification in child support. In fact, if your financial circumstances have changed, or you learn that the financial circumstances of your ex-spouse has changed, then prompt follow-up with your lawyer is advisable. ■

Top Ten Tips

Here's the inside scoop on how to save on legal fees in a divorce.

By Linda C. Senn

When it becomes clear that your marriage is over, and no amount of pre-tense or counseling can fix what is broken, you'll need to line up an attorney to represent you in the divorce process. At this extremely vulnerable time, you'll be placing your life and your future in your attorney's hands, and you'll add one more worry to your ample list of stresses – the high cost of divorce!

Attorneys usually charge an hourly rate calculated in 15-minute increments – even if the service takes only a minute or two of his time. That “quick little call” you make to your lawyer could cost you from $50 and up. If you succumb to the temptation to call every day, your monthly charge just for phone calls can run well over $1,000. If the process drags on for a year, you'll pay $12,000 and up just for those brief daily calls!

Here are ten simple steps for saving big bucks over the course of separation and divorce; some of the tips are general and can be applied to other legal situations as well.

- 1. Saving money on legal fees starts before you have your first attorney interview. Round up all the personal referrals you can from friends, family, colleagues, and neighbors who were happy with their own divorce lawyers. Ask if the client's calls were returned in a timely manner, or if sustained nagging was required to get a call-back. The bill should run far less for a focused, efficient attorney than it would for a disorganized one. Did that attorney stall or delay the process? Did she favor lengthy debates between opposing attorneys? Was her billing accurate, detailed, and free from “fluff?” These factors can have a major effect on the final cost.
- 2. During your initial telephone interview with the attorney, ask what he charges and how the fee is calculated. Is it a flat hourly fee charged in 15-minute increments, or is it figured by some other method? Ask if he requires an initial retainer, and if so, how much for your situation. Complex divorces often call for a more substantial amount. Tell the lawyer that you want to keep the costs to a reasonable minimum and ask if he'll help you to do so.

We find money

With over 20 years of experience, Forensic Divorce Attorney and AAML Certified Family Law Arbitrator Jeffrey W. Brend knows that hidden assets, money laundering, and tax and bankruptcy fraud are rampant in divorce cases. His unique approach, can handle every legal and financial issue that your divorce case involves. Jeffrey has been named an Illinois Super Lawyer from 2007 to 2013, a LexisNexis Martindale-Hubbell AV-rated attorney and one of America's Premier Attorneys featured in Newsweek, Fortune Magazine and on the Sky Radio Networks. Mr. Brend has mastered his skills as a Certified Public Accountant, Certified Fraud Examiner, Business Valuator and Child Representative. He currently serves as President of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers, Illinois Chapter.

An expert in the legal and financial aspects of divorce

"I'm the only person in the country who is a Fellow of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers, an Accredited Senior Appraiser of the American Society of Appraisers, and an Accredited Business Valuator of the AICPA."

Brend is often retained by either party or appointed by the court as a financial expert. "Since I have litigated hundreds of family-law cases, I have an advantage as a financial expert. I understand what the court will want to hear, and alternatively, I understand what the divorce attorney will need in order to be prepared."

Fulfilling all of the client's needs

With a sophisticated financial background, Brend saves clients time and money. "Our practice fulfills all of our clients' needs in divorce, including tax, business valuations, forensic accounting estate planning, and collaborative law. We can do that work ourselves." Brend understands that clients and their children are undergoing great emotional strain "Have a good therapist help work through the emotional stress," he advises. "This will help and facilitate objective thinking and evidence."

Effective in or out of court

Levin & Brend can resolve your divorce through settlement or litigation. "We have a simple philosophy in handling divorce: we're reasonable outside the courtroom, and advocates in the courtroom. We believe in fostering settlements without protracted litigation, because you should be respectful and professional with other attorneys at all times.." Brend is a member of the Collaborative Law Institute of Illinois, but has an aggressive courtroom style. "When you litigate a case, you should play to win." He is also an adjunct professor at Chicago-Kent Law and co-founder of the Daley Center's Court Facilitator Program, which provides experienced matrimonial lawyers that volunteer to help settle legal disputes in Cook County .

Helping to change lives for the better

A versatile, detail-oriented attorney, Brend appreciates how family law can change clients' lives for the better. "Practicing family law gives me the opportunity to help people at the time of their greatest needs and emotional vulnerability," he says. His well-rounded background helps achieve a favorable result for every client, in or out of court.

Levin & Brend, PC. is located in Chicago, Illinois.

3. Don't discuss the weather, the baseball playoffs, or your mother's petunias: chit chat is expensive. Even though she's holding your future in her hands, and there's a natural inclination to talk to your attorney as a friend, socializing can become expensive. Allow a brief time to reconnect either in person or over the phone, then get on with business. By the same token, if you have a gabby attorney, learn how to gently but firmly bring her back to the business at hand.
4. Although you may find a genuinely sympathetic attorney, don't use him as a counselor. Go to a licensed therapist. An experienced mental-health professional will be more effective, will cost less per hour, and will help you deal with the emotional peaks and pits that continually throw you off balance. In addition to that, you'll have developed a relationship with a therapist who can guide you through the rocky recovery period after the divorce is granted.
5. Don't ask for special paperwork. Whenever possible, run your own copies, take notes when you talk to your attorney on the phone (so you don't have to call him later to double-check on the conversation), and look up any phone numbers and addresses he may need in working up your case.
6. Don't complain about your soon-to-be-ex unless it directly applies to the current procedure. This is so very tempting during divorce (and subsequent custody and/or maintenance hearings)! You feel compelled to point out how moronic and venal your soon-to-be-ex is, and by implication, how much better a human being you are. Resist the urge. It's both pointless and expensive.
7. If you invite your attorney to lunch (or vice-versa), find out first if it will be "on the clock." There may be times when a luncheon meeting is most convenient for both of you – just be sure you know the ground rules going in. If you'll be discussing business, have a pen and paper with you so the lunchtime information doesn't disappear with the last cup of coffee. Be especially vigilant about idle chatter if you're paying attorney's fees for the privilege.
8. Ask for specific ways you can save on lawyer hours, such as doing your own research, filling out forms, or mailing notices. You just might be able to shave a few hundred dollars off the final tab by doing some of the routine clerical work yourself. In a long, drawn-out divorce, ask the lawyer periodically if there are any other aspects you can take care of yourself to save money.
9. Consider hiring a skilled mediator to help you and your spouse arrive at mutually agreeable solutions to your financial and custody disagreements. Mediators are specifically trained to help you resolve your problems together, and the cost will probably be less that you'd pay for the opposing attorneys to argue with each other. (You'll still need to retain your own lawyer to check any agreement before you sign it, however.) Mediators also allow you to employ cooperation and compromise in arriving at a settlement agreement, which leaves far less emotional scarring than the adversarial attorney-to-attorney method.
10. Do your own Discovery. Discovery is basically pre-trial disclosure of pertinent facts and documents, including financial figures, by one or both parties in a divorce or other legal process. It can involve a fair amount of sleuthing time, so you'll be money ahead if you ferret out the hard-to-find information (like hidden assets), rather than relying on your attorney to do it all.

One last word about maintaining control of your legal expenses: request itemized monthly bills from your attorney. Knowing just how your legal dollars are being spent can be the most effective aid in helping you keep them to a reasonable minimum! ■

Victimhood

The Curse of Divorce Recovery

By Shelley Stile

Feeling like or labelling yourself a victim of your divorce is one of the most disastrous moves you can make; it will prevent you from moving forward into a new life. Victimhood renders you powerless. To create a new life after your divorce, you need to be fully responsible for your past, present, and future. Being responsible means having control over your life, and that is what it takes to both recover from the emotional wounds of a divorce as well as plan for your new life.

If you consider yourself a victim, then you believe that you had little to do with what happened to you. You take no responsibility. The responsibility is someone else's, and that leaves you with no power. Victims blame someone else. Blame absolves them of their part in the dissolution of their marriage, and it keeps them stuck in the pain of the past and their divorce.

It is so much easier to place blame on someone else than accept personal responsibility. The fact is that two people inhabit all marriages. Those two people are co-creators of their marriage and their divorce. Even if one of the partners was unfaithful or a liar, there are always signs along the way that we either refused to see or to acknowledge. If we are in denial about all the warning signs along the way, we can only look to ourselves for lack of some responsible action.

"If you consider yourself a victim, then you believe that you had little to do with what happened to you."

Blame leads to resentment. Resentment consumes our mind chatter. We spend far too many hours ruminating about all the things that our ex has done or continues to do to us. We resent their new life and our lack of one. Consider the amount of time wasted being in resentment. Exactly who suffers? The answer of course is clear: you. You are the one who is angry, sad, bitter, and unhappy — not your ex. Your blame and resentment, along with your regrets, are like poison in your system. It completely immobilizes you.

Ten tips to help you overcome these feelings of victimhood:

1. What is the truth of your marriage? If you are completely honest and courageous, you will have begun to recognize that indeed, you played an integral part in your marriage and divorce. All too often, we interpret events and situations in our marriage and believe our interpretation to be the truth. For instance, "My husband was cheating and lied to me about it. I interpret that to mean that I am no longer desirable, that I failed as a wife. I live in my marriage as if that is a cold, hard fact." It is not. The fact is that he cheated. Period. That fact could mean a hundred different things. Stick to the facts.

2. Where are you responsible? What were the warning signs along the way that you refused to acknowledge? Where were you in denial? Where were you an enabler? For example, I know a woman who was completely surprised when her husband left her. She went on to tell me that she always gave him total freedom to do whatever he wanted: trips that lasted a month at a time, and little or no responsibility in rearing their children are just a couple of items on the list. She handled it all. Translation: she was an enabler and gave him the rope that was needed to strangle the marriage. Acknowledge where you didn't do what you needed to do. Accept responsibility. Responsibility is empowerment.

3. Exactly what are you resisting?

Why can't you see the truth and accept responsibility? Why do you suppose you cannot accept the reality of your life as it is now? These are questions you must address. What do you gain by remaining a victim? Are you afraid of facing the truth? Are you living in what you think should be versus what is? Do you enjoy being a victim? Do you like the fact that being a victim absolves you of any responsibility and therefore any positive action?

"It is so much easier to place blame on someone else than accept personal responsibility."

4. If you are resisting the reality of your life, consider doing a turn-around and simply go with the flow of your life's direction. Fighting reality is a useless business. The more you resist something, the more it will persist. Consider the flow of a river. What does it feel like to swim against the current? That is what you do when you cannot accept what is.

5. Don't allow your fear of the unknown to run you. Are you afraid of your future? Are you afraid of being alone? What exactly are you afraid of? I recently heard someone say that they spend so much time worrying and little or nothing of what they worry about actually comes true! Do you see the insanity of that? We don't know from day-to-day what the future holds for us. How about if you believed that your future was going to be just fine instead of being in fear? What if everything happens for a reason?

"Consider the amount of time wasted being in resentment."

6. Consider your perspective on life. Your attitude – what is it? Do you believe that life is hard and unjust? Do you see everything that is wrong and nothing that might be right? Not only does your attitude affect how you handle life, it can actually determine your reality. If you believe that life is too hard, then that is exactly what life will be for you: it's a self-fulfilling prophecy.

7. Do things differently. If your victimhood along with its blame and resentment is not working for you (and I guarantee it isn't), then for heaven's sake, do things differently! Try on a new perspective. Examine the truth of your life versus your own personal interpretations. Take responsibility. Take actionable steps forward. Stop resisting. Get out and do new things, meet new people, and don't isolate yourself. Get back into the swing of things.

"You are the one who is angry, sad, bitter, and unhappy — not your ex. Your blame and resentment, along with your regrets, are like poison in your system."

8. Learn from your experience and use that new wisdom for empowerment. Once you see the life lessons of your marriage and divorce (and believe me, they are numerous and impactful), you can use that wisdom to be a better person – to help you become the person that you truly want to be. Everything that happens to us in life has a hidden lesson for us if we only look for it. Might there actually be a silver lining in this storm cloud?

9. Consider the costs of remaining a victim. Do you want to live your life as a bitter and angry person? Is that how you want to be seen? If you have children, is victimhood what you want to model for them? Do you realize that as a victim, you have no power to change your life? Remaining a victim is a very bleak picture.

10. Choose a new and better life. Think of all the decisions and choices you make during the course of a day. Are they moving you away from being a victim or keeping you stuck there? Stop and think before you make important and even not so important decisions or choices. Our choices define us and determine the course of our life.

In closing, I want to share a few bits of wisdom from the Dalai Lama: When you lose, don't lose the lesson. Follow the three Rs: respect for self, respect for others, and responsibility for all your actions. Remember that not getting what you want is sometimes a stroke of luck. Judge your success by what you had to give up in order to get it. ■

25 Tips for Divorced Parents

How to create special memories and strengthen your bonds with your children.

By Tommy Maloney

I was five years old when my parents divorced; coincidentally, my son was also five when his mother and I split up. While going through my divorce and travelling for work, I created the following tips from firsthand experience to help divorced parents stay connected with their kids – and to forge a positive bond in each other's lives.

1. Talk to your kids every day

It does not matter if it is just a phone call, long or short. Kids need to hear their parents' voice daily because it reassures them they still have a connection with you.

Tip: Don't be afraid to ask them personal questions.

2. Send your kids postcards or letters

Do this even if you live in the same town. If they are just learning how to read, written notes to your kids are even better. Think about when you were a kid and received mail and how special you felt.

Tip: Have them write to you.

3. Purchase a webcam for yourself and your kids

This is very important if you live far away and cannot spend time with them on a regular basis.

Tip: Flip Cam for the kid(s).

4. Tell them EVERY DAY that you LOVE them

Do I really need to explain this one?

Tip: Find out what makes them feel loved – then do it.

5. Make Quality vs. Quantity time with them

You do not need to create an "event". Just being with and talking to them is more vital than you will ever know.

Tip: Make a Gingerbread house together.

6. Read to one another

Find out what they like to read and buy a few books at the bookstore. Read them one of your books, even if it does not have pictures.

Tip: Go to the bookstore together.

7. Embrace their interests no matter what they are

You need to get yourself out of your comfort zone and learn to embrace their interests – even if that means riding a roller-coaster.

Tip: Research their interests to be able to ask them questions – and understand the answers.

8. Volunteer at their school

You get to see them in their environment, which can sometimes be both shocking and embarrassing. I have learned that teachers love when a parent comes to school and lends a helping hand.

Tip: If you can't volunteer at their school, find another one of their activities to become involved in.

9. Honesty IS the best policy

This is most important when your kids tell you they wish all of you were still a family. Explain to them they will always be loved and that you are still a family.

Tip: You may need to show it and say it several times.

10. Create traditions together

Think of things that make your time together special and create your own customs separate from standard holidays.

Tip: What traditions did you have as a kid?

11. You are not the victim

I advise you to see a trusted counselor to help you work through your emotions. Do not use your kids for this!

Tip: Take control of your own healing.

12. Respect the rules

Teach them there are rules in your house just like at the other parent's house.

Tip: Have your own rules, but try to respect the other household's rules as well.

13. Two words: Road Trip

Take vacations – even if it is just a weekend in a hotel down the street. Kids love to be in a hotel with a pool.

Tip: Try setting up a tent in the living room once in a while.

14. Understand that they will miss their mom or dad – and that is okay

The bond between kids and their other parent may be different than the one they will have with you. Focus on strengthening your bond with them and try not to compare yours with the other parent's.

Tip: Kids will naturally cycle from one parent to another. Be patient – your turn will come.

15. Let your kids see that you are not perfect

It is okay to admit to your kids that you try your best but can't be perfect.

Tip: This will teach them how to handle their own mistakes.

16. Teach them the importance of being physically active

Encourage your kids to ride their bikes alongside you as you run, or go biking together. Being a role model is tough, but suck it up.

Tip: Your kids want you to be around for a long time.

17. Be in contact with their teachers

Try not to be a pain, but do be an involved parent. Though you won't always get a solid answer, ask your kids how school is going and contact their teachers for updates.

Tip: Kids need both of their parents to be involved.

18. Respect that your favorite sports team is not always going to be theirs

Heck, they might not like the same sports you do or even like sports at all! Enjoy what they do like and embrace those things with them.

Tip: You can always watch your sports when they are back at the other parent's house.

19. When you ask them to make their beds, you also need to do the same Kids want discipline and you need to set the example.

When they are at your place, have chores for them to do just as they do at the other parent's house.

Tip: Kids need normalcy between the two houses.

20. Fast food is too easy

Doing things such as cooking together is a great learning experience for both of you. Make the fast food runs only on special occasions.

Tip: Home cooking is less expensive and healthier, too.

21. Have sleepovers with their friends

When possible, have their friends over for playdates and sleepovers. It is a special feeling for your kids to show off their bedroom.

Tip: It's a great way to learn about their friends.

22. Take the high road

If your former spouse is not being reasonable, or if you are being hard-headed, remember it is not about winning disagreements – it's about successful co-parenting. Co-parenting is about the kids.

Tip: You won't regret taking the high road in the long run.

23. You need to be a positive role model

Though actors, musicians, and sports stars are modern role models, the bottom line is to fill that role yourself and be there for them.

Tip: Do your best to be involved with their lives and be a positive influence.

24. Do not be hung up on dating right away after a divorce

Work on yourself before bringing someone new into the equation. Kids need to know they are your highest priority.

Tip: There is someone out there for you, but just make sure they are the right one for you and your kids.

25. Help make your house a home for all of you

Kids need to have some of their own "treasures" around to be comfortable at your place.

Tip: Take the time to learn from your past mistakes, so you don't repeat them. ■

Divorce Magazine: A fan wrote this, please provide your support:

"How can I be sure that I will get my fair share from my divorce? My husband owns his own business and I am a stay at home mom with 2 children (6 and 10 years old). I was never involved in his business, but I know there is a lot of cash money because it is a restaurant. I know he does not declare all his income. My divorce lawyer says he can get to the bottom of it but my husband is not very co-operative. He wants to keep the children so he does not have to pay child support. I am very concerned that I won't get custody because I can't afford to fight."

MM: I just recently got divorced. My ex and I owned our own businesses as well. I know state laws vary but you should be entitled to half of everything. As far as your children go, I have never heard of a mom losing custody unless she is deemed unfit or voluntarily gives them up. The ex and I agreed on joint custody with primary placement with me and he was ordered to pay me child support. It shouldn't matter if you can't afford to fight. That doesn't define what type of parent you are. Maybe a mediator might be a better option for you financially. Stay strong and stand your ground. Believe me... mine dragged out for 18 months and it was killing me. Don't give in to him, especially if it doesn't feel right. Divorce is brutal... you will be ok:) Good luck!

DS: First of all do you honestly believe he only wants the children for monetary reasons why can't a mother believe a father loves and wants his children.

CH: Most dads do love their kids. But some situations they don't, sadly. And hopefully the mom is seeing it correctly. I had a situation where he had 50% parenting time, and gave it up 6 months later to 13%.

MM: I know lots of dads who love their kids and don't want to pay support... my ex included. Every case is different.

DS: The system goes against the father. It's always about money.

KJ: DS you are really opening up my emotions on this one. How dare you say the system goes against the father- maybe in Nebraska but that is certainly not the case everywhere. But you did get something right...it's always about the money...and I know a lot of fathers that want more custody just because they won't pay as much child support

DS: KJ the system is against men everywhere and yes I dare say it the system always goes against the father and I know a lot of mothers who only want custody for more money read the posts here there all against fathers the wife gets this she gets that and fathers get screwed it cost me 1200$ just to get the standard Christmas time because she refused before we were even divorced 3 weeks to see my child because she didn't think I had a need and a court order is what it took to make it happen. Don't you dare say fathers have just as much right to there children as the mother and the courts side with the mother.

CH: No, not all moms are saints. I question my goodness as a mother every day. I'm human. I have seen plenty of great dads do the job because the mother has poor parenting skills.

MM: My ex wanted me to say we have shared custody, which we don't, so he wouldn't have to pay as much child support.

YSTW: I very much doubt he will get custody of the children, the courts usually award to the Mother unless abuse is involved, which it doesn't sound like. Your husband doesn't have to be very involved and Your attorney can do specific searches to find hidden money. Your husband will have to provide certain things if he is court ordered. You don't have to be involved in his business to get half (if community property is the law in your state). Your job has been raising the children and running your home so he could run a business. I know this sounds like a lot but please don't just give in which is what I did 20 years ago and had to go back to court to get more spousal support. You are entitled to spousal and child support. Stay strong, you will get through this and will move forward from a place of power. Lots of luck and many blessings.

DS: All your lawyer wants is your money.

CH: If it becomes something you can't afford then you can have your bills become his bills. Stand your ground. You may need to go into discovery. My ex told the judge he makes the same amount of money as I do after child support, I work 2 jobs and pay considerably less rent than his property taxes a year, and he drives a Bently. So anything that he doesn't have to pay because the business pays those expenses are income.
